Anderson-Based Company Now 100-Percent Wind-Powered

QUALITY PRINTING COMPANY MOVES TO CHANGE INTERNAL CLIMATE FOR 2009

(Friday, March 12, 2009, Anderson, Ind.) — Quality Printing Company, one of the Midwest's premier commercial sheet-fed printers, announced today that its manufacturing plant is now 100-percent wind-powered, making it one of only two printers in the entire Indianapolis metro area able to make that claim.

Quality Printing has partnered with Community Energy, which develops wind farms, supplies power directly to end users and offers green energy solutions to major businesses and governments as well as to more than 110,000 residential and small-business customers.

Using Community Energy's network of alternative energy suppliers and electricity distribution utilities, Quality Printing now purchases wind-generated renewable energy certificates that verify that all of the electricity it uses in its daily operations is directly matched to a wind energy purchase.

"Taking steps like this will allow Quality Printing Company to help preserve our environment in a tangible way," said Steve Harney, CEO. "This move toward more responsible and sustainable practices also reflects Quality Printing Company's serious and ongoing commitment to embracing environmentally friendly production practices, equipment, facilities and products."
